Vienna, Virginia (prsafe) January 20, 2021 - Johnson & Masumi, a Vienna immigration law firm, has recently released a new educational resource that goes over working during removal proceedings. The new article is guided by the seasoned immigration attorneys at Johnson and Masumi who have helped individuals going through removal proceedings understand what to expect and how working during this process is handled. They hope it will help readers feel more confident about what they will experience during removal proceedings.

Johnson and Masumi offer readers some valuable information regarding working during removal proceedings and what those going through this process should expect. In the article, they explain the different situations where immigrants are allowed to work during removal proceedings. These include things such as those who are applicants for asylum, cancellation of removal applicants, adjustment of status applicants, DACA applicants, and more. The team at Johnson and Masumi hope this information will help immigrants get a better idea of what to expect when it comes to working during this process and what options are available to them.

While this new article focuses on explaining working during removal proceedings, Johnson and Masumi's website also provides information regarding their team, experience, as well as a full list of legal service offerings. Their law firm offers creative and thorough legal services for immigrants that include employment visas, fiance visas, non-immigrant visas, student visas, DACA, green cards, and more. With decades of experience in immigration law, they are dedicated to applying their legal guidance and client-focused services to those seeking immigration assistance.

With the addition of this new article, the team at Johnson and Masumi hopes that readers will have a better understanding of whether or not they are able to work legally during removal proceedings.
