1. Use Omnichannel Strategy to Spread Your Brand Message To drive diverse audience interest, you need to have an omnichannel marketing strategy in place, to provide a myriad of multiple mediums (social media, website, direct mail, review websites, publicity, and even phone calls). Establish a meaningful and close connection with your consumers by reaching them where they are, mostly. An easy way is to fetch a Social Media Marketing (SMM) buyers persona in place, that will help you to segment your audience (gender, educational background, age, industry, goals, challenges, etc) 2. Ask for Reviews & Feedback from Your Learners You got to encourage your consumers to leave feedback or review that will help to revamp your education program strategies & progress effectively. Remember to make it a fun activity by employing gamification instead of forcing their experience with your program. 3. Create an Engaging Content Mix (Blogs, Videos, Infographics, etc) Your customer education program is simply to transform/create a perceptive about how you do business. So, donâ€™t rely on heaps of information instead make it an exciting & engaging mix of content. (Employ Social Media Strategies aligning your content mix) 1. Have a mobile-friendly website interface (Optimize accordingly) For any website interface to be mobile-friendly, you need to have a session with your UI/UX experts or try with your developers to fill out the gaps. Your consumer is expecting an easy-to-access & guided navigational journey, so remember to optimize your page loading time & navigable elements to be mobile-friendly. 2. Invest in building Education Applications Applications are the safest way to produce proficient learners. It offers a sense of convenience in the learnerâ€™s journey. Creating an education-based app can help you maximize your ROI while building a community of talent - ready to use your product.
