One of the most notable consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic was the propensity for Saudi people to put on weight. This was not due to the COVID-19 virus itself. Instead, it was the consequence of social distancing and home seclusion, which meant that many people were engaged in far lower levels of physical activity than they would ordinarily be and led sedentary lifestyles. This was further exacerbated during the second and third quarters of 2020, in which the Saudi authorities banned people f...
