Kingsley's new site allows visitors to more easily find the information they need and get in touch with the company. Menus are now available across the top of each page and in a collapsible menu on smaller screens, improving navigation, and large buttons placed throughout each page facilitate ease of contacting Kingsley for more information. The content has also been improved to provide potential customers with as much detail as possible prior to getting in touch. The home page clearly lists what to expect when hiring Kingsley for services, and further down the page visitors can read reviews for more context. The new site also contains a blog with articles outlining answers to frequent water restoration problems, explaining water damage, and more.

When combined, these features create an enhanced user experience. Because the site is easier to navigate, visitors will be more likely to take their time on the site and have a favorable impression of the company, which encourages them to trust Kingsley for their water restoration needs. These features have the potential to drive new leads to the company and grow its business.
